Angelic Functions

Alongside their ministering function to heirs of salvation (Heb. 1:14), angels are depicted as a chorus of singers praising God and holding Him in reverence (Psalm 89:5–8). Reading Psalm 89, the language of the psalm suggests that angelic creatures, and not humans, are the subject of these verses. Even among those of heaven, God is depicted as superior to the hosts despite the language of this psalm referring to these creatures as “holy”—a detail true of God as well. This tells us not only of their function in some regard but also of their character. These holy ones praise and revere God—something we humans can learn from our angelic brethren. If they are holy and praise and revere God, how much more so should we?

Angels were often depicted as gods in passages of the Hebrew Bible. In Genesis 6:2; Psalm 29:1; and Job 1:6, the Hebrew phrase is translated as “sons of God,” but it could be rendered as “gods.” In Psalm 82:1, 6, “gods” is translated and accurately represented. It isn’t that they were gods as we might think about Greco-Roman gods or any other polytheistic civilization, but that they constituted a heavenly council, or court, that surrounded God.

Psalm 82 depicts a divine council scene akin to Job 1–2 and 1 Kings 22. However, this particular psalm has not been without its interpretive difficulties. Some have suggested this is a council of angels or heavenly beings while others believe it to refer to earthly rulers. One commentator states the following:

An important aspect of the ancient viewpoint here is that human rulers make decisions that mirror the actions of the “gods.” The term “gods” is used both of supernatural beings and human rulers as their agents ... Therefore, divine retribution reaches into both the human and the heavenly realms in order to vindicate the victims of injustice and oppression.
